

I am 100% against allowing cellphone usage aboard airborne aircraft. Cellphone usage in public can be irritating and distracting. In the confined space of an aircraft cabin, multiplied by many passengers, this would be magnified and cause disruption and myriad problems. I also think security could be threatened by allowing an airborne passenger to communicate with someone on the ground. Please rethink this issue and listen to those of us who have worked on airplanes for years....37 for me. I can't imagine the chaos and disruption that would result from allowing passengers to use cellphones in this very confined and public space.
